among major industrial nations this year. The official said Washington had been disappointed in the decision Thursday by West Germany's Bundesbank to leave interest rates unchanged. Although the official said he was "pleased" with Bonn's report of 3.3-percent economic growth in the second quarter, compared with the second quarter of 1985, he said he still saw latitude for a further cut in West Germany's discount rate, the key lending rate, which is now at 3.5 percent. He said he also saw room for a reduction in Japan's discount rate.

Speculation of a coordinated rate cut has been dampened in markets this week by a growing percep-tion that inflation in the leading Western economies is about to WOESCO.

On Friday, the Labor Department reported that U.S. wholesale prices in August rose 0.3 percent from July. It said that even with the August increase, however, prices at the wholesale level had fallen at an annual rate of 5 percent for the first eight months of 1986.

But economists cantioned that the August increase, only the second this year, was a signal that the inflation rate has probably touched its low point. Mr. Baker, clarifying remarks made last week, which he said were misinterpreted, said the U.S. economy was on target in meeting the Reagan administration's 3.2-percent growth estimate for 1986. He said a remark he had made about 4percent growth referred to a 4-percent annual rate from now through the end of the year.

In other remarks, Mr. Baker said that the need for support from West Germany and Japan in maintaining world economic recovery See BAKER, Page 2

Not by nature anti-western, or anti-capitalist, it is pro-muslim. By its extra-ordinary power to embody religious, social and economic drives, it becomes a channel of expression, and a catalyst of protest.

What are the realities behind the caricatures

To answer this question a team of leading scholars drawn from Oxford and other major universities has worked for the last year. Their findings are now presented in a major Oxford Analytica study Islam in Perspective.

This detailed and authoritative work first examines the basic tenets of Islam, and then proceeds to explain its impact on social economic and political events, country by country, in the Middle East, Africa and Asia.

'Islam in Perspective' provides definite answers to the question 'what makes Islam 'Islami

Greece, Bulgaria Vow Nonaggression

ATHENS (AP) - Greece and Bulgaria, members of rival military alliances, have signed a "friendship proclamation" pledging matual nonaggression, the Greek government announced Friday.

Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou of Greece and Todor Zhivkov, the Bulgarian leader, signed the agreement on Thursday in Sofia, government officials said.

According to a text of the 10-point accord released in Athens, Greece and Bulgaria agreed that neither will "initiate or encourage any actions directed against the other." Greece is a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and Bulgaria is a member of the Warsaw Pact.

The first human tests of the new immune-system therapy, already approved by the cancer institute, await a final go-ahead from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration.

Dr. Rosenberg received widespread publicity last December when he reported in the New England Journal of Medicine promising initial results in treating advanced human cancers with a similar technique. That method used the protein interleukin-2, a natural immune-system booster, to transform circulating white blood cells into activated killer cells, called LAK cells.

After that announcement, about 2,600 cancer patients called the NCI seeking the treatment. Since then, six medical centers have begun trials of the LAK cells that will involve several hundred patients.

Soviet Envoy Optimistic on Security Pact

STOCKHOLM - The Soviet Union's top negotiator at the Euro-pean security conference said Fri-day that the 35-nation meeting would produce results by its Sept. 19 deadline unless one of the participants drastically changed its position

The chief Soviet delegate, Oleg A. Grinevsky, said, "It is now plain and completely clear that an agreement at the conference is within the realm of very real possibilities." He added, "Only if there is a change in the political attitude of some participating country can the conference fail."

The conference, which began in January 1984, is trying to establish methods for avoiding an accidental conflict that might occur through a ication on a miscallack of comm culation about troop movements. The United States, Canada and all European countries except Albania are taking part. Mr. Grinevsky said problems re-mained to be solved but that the participants were apparently will-ing to compromise. He noted that greements on some issues were not being allowed to hold up draft-ing of a final accord. He said that if difficulties did arise, the flexible structure of the talks would allow their solution to be postponed until the last minute.

The conference is drawing up ground rules on the notification, inspection and observation of military activities in Europe with the aim of making events more predictable and thus lessening the risk of an accidental war.

The meeting is officially called the Conference on Confidence-and Security-Building Measures and Disarmament in Europe. Two main differences remain between East and West as the conference enters its final week: the threshold at which exercises should require notification, and the nationality of the planes inspectors should use to fly over the territory of a state to monitor its military activities.

A senior diplomat from the North Atlantic Treaty Organiza-tion said: "We should be able to begin approving the draft of the final document early next week, leaving blank spaces for the most anazi svitizac

The Truth About Taba

Israel and Egypt have more argent things to debate than a petty border dispute over a flyspeck in the Sinai Peninsula called Taba. Finally, this quarrel over 700 yards (640 meters) of beach and a resort hotel is to be enhanced to binding artistication. Thus has submitted to binding arbitration. Thus has cleared the path for the meeting in Alexan-dria between Prime Minister Shimon Peres and President Hosni Mubarak, the first Israeli-Egyptian summit session in five years. It's been too long between drinks.

It took a strong American prod to end the dispute, which both governments magnified to please domestic audiences. Because it boasts an Israeli-built luxury hotel, Taba has been the prickliest of 15 border points in dispute since Israel returned the last of Sinai to Egypt in 1982. Egypt asserts that old Ottoman maps place Taba in its territo-ry, a claim acknowledged by Israel the first time it relinquished Sinai, after their 1956 war. But Israel insists the old maps are inaccurate and agreed to arbitration only after a bitter cabinet argument. And even then the negotiators wrangled for months over the instructions to the abitrators. The truth about Taba is that the quarrel was not about sand, but about trust. The Camp David accord required an immediate trans-fer of land in exchange for a still-unrealized condition of peace — normal diplomatic ties and lively trade in goods and people.

When Mr. Mubarak recalled his ambas sador to protest Israel's invasion of Leba-non in 1982, he was accused in Jerusalem of violating the treaty. He in turn felt isolated in the Arab world and blamed Israel for not moving toward the promised autonomy for Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza, American mediation, reinforced by gen-erous aid to both countries, has helped to break the Taba impasse. It lets Mr. Mn-barak resume full diplomatic relations and gives Mr. Peres a modest achievement be fore he turns over the prime ministry to the harder-line Likud next month. A minor, sterile dispute is being removed from the Middle East agenda, leaving a little more time to confront truly difficult problems. -THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Aligned and Spineless

The Nonaligned Movement is too divided to pick its next meeting place, too aligned to condemn the Soviet occupation of a member state, too spineless even to expel a nation whose leader all but spat at the members. What happened at the movement's aimless conference in Zimbabwe recalls a famous remark by Marx - Groucho, that is - that he would never join a club so porous as to admit him. By trying to repre-sent too much, the 99-nation club stands for nothing at all.

That point was made, vituperatively, by Colonel Moammar Gadhafi of Libya, one of two score heads of government to show up. He called the movement a "farce," denounced the name "nonaligned" and demanded expulsion of all members who have relations with the United States or Israel. He was rebuked by the host and new chairman, Prime Minister Robert Mugabe. With nonaligned tact, delegates applauded both. Mr. Mugabe is a serious leader who appeared to want to steer this meandering vessel on a useful course by mobilizing sanctions against South Africa. Opposing apartheid can hardly sustain the movement's pretensions, but the members cannot agree on any other cause, Perhaps a

At the first meeting in Belgrade 25 years ago, the movement's founders dared to con-tend that newly developing nations would speak, as President Tito of Yugoslavia put it, as "the conscience of mankind." That bright dawn has long since vanished, its epitaph written by the vicious war between Iran and Iraq, which bleeds on without a peep from the other members. Iran's delegate rose at the recent meeting to demand the execution of Iraq's leaders.

The more sensible minority did manage to delay a commitment to meet next in Nicknagua, which would have given the chairmanship to that scarcely nonaligned government in 1989. The site and succession will not be decided for two years. A less contentious choice would be a welcome sign that the movement is rethinking its reflexive, self-injuring hostility to America.

The African Equation

In sub-Saharan Africa entire countries are being pressed backward into greater poverty and hunger by the weight of excessively rapid population growth. It is the only region of the world in which that is still true. The reason is the familiar one: Its death rates are falling, but its birthrates unlike those throughout the rest of the developing world - are not. The World Bank estimates that the region's present popula-tion of 460 million will expand to 730 million in the next 15 years. If Africa remains turn of the next century will be living even less well than Africans live today. In a part of the world that is extremely poor, and in which 70 percent of the people are farmers, the equation between popula-tion and agriculture is crucial. The population is rising 3 percent a year. Very few countries have ever managed to keep their agricultural output increasing steadily at 3 percent, and those few — Mexico, for example — were working at much higher levels of mechanization. To prevent misery on a gigantic scale in Africa, it's essential to work on both sides of the equation: to slow population growth down and to speed agricultural development up. As for food supplies, there's an indecently sharp contrast between the current surphyses in the richest countries and the shortages in the poorest, Governments in North America and Europe groan that their farmers produce too much; governments in Afri-ca despectely try to make do with not enough. Is the answer simply to put grain in ships and send them south?

That's a dangerous idea, the UN's Food and Agriculture Organization argues. The rich countries are currently selling their wheat and com below cost to get rid of it, but that won't last. It never does. And when

A Summit Can Be Jeopardized on Purpose Japan Needs

WASHINGTON - The case of Nicholas Daniloff, the Ameri-can journalist arrested in Moscow on charges of spying, was not simply a human drama. It was also an affair of state. A summit meeting between President Reagan and Mikhail Gor-bachev, tentatively scheduled for later this year, has been jeopardized. Powerful forces on both sides of the Iron Curtain would not be sorry to see the summit meeting scuttled. They may have found in the Daniloff case the means to do this. Suddenly a relatively minor incident endangered the whole complex of superpower re-lations, including the control of nuclear we

Why did the Russians arrest an American journalist at such a delicate time just before the Soviet and American foreign ministers were to meet to work out a date and agenda for the muit conference?

The assumption is that they want-ed to swap him for one of their own spies, Germadi Zakharov, a United Nations employee caught last month by the Federal Bureau of Investiga-tion with stolen documents. Since Mr. Zakharov does not enjoy diplo-matic immunity, he was scheduled to be tried in an American court. To get him back, the Russians needed someone also without diplomatic immuni-ty. This, it is argued, is why they chose a journalist. Did the Russians think there was no risk involved and that the Americans would agree to a straight spy swap, just as they had agreed to oth-ers? This, after all, is generally the way that the superpowers conduct teir spying business. Or did the Russians not care what effect jailing Mr. Daniloff might have? It is worth remembering that they consider all foreign journalists to be agents of their governments and engaged, by the nature of their work, in suspect activities. The idea of the journalist as a disinterested news gatherer is quite foreign to their experience. In their eyes, Mr. Daniloff and Mr. Zakharov might have seemed in the same category, even though Mr. Zakharov was actually caught spying while Mr. Daniloff was merely a perennial suspect.

Further, the Russians might have decided to make the Daniloff-Zakharov case a test of Mr. Reagan's summit intentions. Although the

By Ronald Steel far refused to make the concessions Russians want a summit accord on nuclear weapons and "star wars,"

Mr. Gorbachev seeks. If Mr. Reagan wanted a summit meeting, the Russians may believe, he could show his good intentions by agreeing to a swap of Mr. Zakharov for Mr. Daniloff. The fact that he was refusing to do so — and instead blow-ing up what they view as a simple spy swap into an international incident - merely confirms their suspicions that nothing would come of the sum-mit meeting anyway. Soviet officials also seem to feel that the Americans have been push-that the Americans have been push-ing them around. They wonder why such a petty agent as Mr. Zakharov was being treated as a major spy and was even denied bail. More impor-tantly, they take Mr. Reagan's con-temptuous rhetoric seriously and are insulted by his dismissal of the Soviet Union as a failed experiment that belongs in the dustbin of history. They are also indignant, as they They are also mangnant, as they continually made clear to me during a recent visit to Moscow, about U.S. military actions against such client states as Nicaragua, Angola, Grena-da, Libya and Cambodia. In their view, the provocations reached a new height this summer when two American destroyers entered the Black Sea and skirted the Russian coast. Although Mr. Gorbachev appears to want better relations with the United States, and has made serious proposals for reducing both nuclear arms and conventional forces in Enrope, powerful voices in the Soviet Union believe it is impossible to do business with Americans. These people would just as soon see the summit meeting aborted, and may have engi-neered Mr. Daniloff's arrest to put Mr. Gorbachev on the spot.

Similarly, there are those in the highest levels of the Reagan administration who oppose a summit en-counter and see the Daniloff case as a

These people have applanded, and in fact, encouraged, the president's in-transigent rhetoric. Like their counterparts in the Soviet Union, they see the Daniloff-Zak-harov case not as a human drams, or even as a quid pro quo between areas even as a quid pro quo between great powers, but as an instrument to preent a summit meeting.

In this sense, this case evokes the U-2 episode in 1959, when the downing of an American spy plane over the Soviet Union became the means by Soviet Onion became the means by which hardliners on both sides blocked a scheduled summit meeting between Nikita S. Khrushchev and Dwight D. Eisenhower. It is an outrage that Mr. Daniloff, who is presumably innocent, should have been held on the same charges as a Soviet spy caught red-handed. But it is a minor outrage, and the means existed to resolve it quickly with a minimum of fanfare. If it becomes the issue that prevents a Reagan-Goroachev summit meeting this year, it is because there are those in both capitals who do not want that ammit meeting ever to take place.

in the region, but which could also serve other purposes. The current scandal, which led to the unusual dismissal of a cabinet minister, Masayoki Fujio, was about this underlying question of Japan's past and future role. Mr. Fujio, min-ister of education, made a series of multic externant; that in effect ar u in effect ex cused Japan's impecial adventures on the grounds that "Didn't every-body?" Understandably, Korea and China were deeply offended. "I am disgusted, and bitter," said a Japanese editor, explaining that he was disgusted because he saw distorted and dangerous nationalist ideas in Mr. Fujio's defense of Japanese aggression, and bitter because he recognized that it reflected a streak of real opinion in his country. It is a minority, what the editor called this "altra-mationalist" opin-ion, but it feeds on shortsighted Western encouragement to Japan to take up its own cudgels. That is the box. Japan has reached the good fortune of deriving vast benefit of involvement not only with its neighbors but with the world at large, the underlying urge of its prewar militaris-tic goal of a "greater Fast Asia co-prosperity sphere."

How the KGB Daniloff Case Harms Gorbachev's Image Made My Life By Marshall I. Goldman

C AMBRIDGE, Massachusetts — Underlying the im-mediate question about what happened to Nicholas Daniloff, and why, is a more basic query: Whatever happened to that new Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorba-chev, and his new era? Despite his shameful behavior at the time of Chernobyl, Mr. Gorbachev undeniably was the man of "openness" and action at home, while abroad he was "a man with whom we can do business." Now, in a throwback to the Khrushchev and Brezhnev eras a inumpalist was accused of being a say and more res eras, a journalist was accused of being a spy, and progress toward arms-control agreements and the chance for a meaningful improvement in American-Soviet relations are put in jeopardy. What is going on? Normally, Americans accused of spying in the Soviet Union are sent packing under the protection of diplomatic immunity. America does the same thing to Soviet spies. The difference in this instance is that when the United States arrested Gennadi Zakharov in late August, it was found that he lacked such immunity. Moreover, America did not follow the usual procedure and allow him out of jail or on bail in the custody of the Soviet ambassador. The Zakharov arrest apparently caught the Soviets off guard. So they decided to arrest Mr. Daniloff, who also

The British promptly expelled a few dozen diplomats, whereupon the Soviets announced that they would match them with the expulsion of an equal number of Britons from the Soviet Union. The British responded by expelling another lew dozen Soviets, and, to everyone's shock, Moscow matched the bid again. Finally it was the British who had to let the matter drop. The Soviets still had plenty of people in England, but by matching the British expulsions they had made sure that London had hardly any of its people left in the Soviet Union. Based on what has happened so far, Mr. Gorbaev seemed determined to use the same s

Reverberations After Daniloff

What remains of journalistic freedom of movement if the secret service sets traps in even the smallest attempt to gather news outside the official channels? What is the status of a foreign correspondent when the host country can hold him hostage to achieve a so-called exchange of spics?

In Washington, the arrest of Nicholas Damiloff should lead to some reflection. As recently as 1980, Admiral Stansfield Turner, director of the CIA at that time, took the liberty of making a public appeal in which be said American journalists should be patriotic enough to contribute to his service every now and then, making every journalist a suspect by implication. The persecution of Mr. Daniloff appeared to have the blessing of the Soviet top eadership. The American anthorities had every reason to act boldly.

- NRC Handelsblad (Rotterdam).

It would appear that the Kremlin is still so badly informed about Western sensibilities that it had no inkling of the fact that putting a man like Mr. Damiloff on trial was the one infallible method of uniting American opinion behind Mr. Reagan and against the renovated facade of Gorbachevian Communism. It will be said, particularly in Western Europe, that it is not worth sacrificing good relations with the Soviet Union for the sake of one individual. But to hand over the spy Gennadi Zakharov in exchange for the journalist would be tantamount to conceding to the Soviet Union the tight to use any and all the members of its diplomatic, trade and cultural delegations in the West for the purpose of espionage.

The Significance of Taba

A small stretch of beach could yet be the unlikely site on which peace in the Middle East begins to be constructed. For without at least some kind of agreement on the procedural means of settling their longstanding dispute over the Red Sea resort of Taba, it is hard to see how the Israeli and Egyptian heads of government could have gathered for their summit in Alexandria. It is regrettable that Israel and Egypt have allowed their dispute over Taba to obstruct a rapprochement. The argument is over whether or not this sunlit Israeli beach should have been handed over with the rest of Sinai under the Camp David settlement. It would be regrettable if either government allowed it to stand in their way any longer as they turn to bigger issues. - The Times (London).

I feared that if I cracked the Russians would make use of it. Friends called from America to console me - the worst thing they could do, for their sympathy would all but make me break down. Eventually, I was cleared and expelled. But meantime I found myself caught up in a political wilderness where there were no rules, the victim of hints and innuendo. Rumors filled the complex where I lived, facled by people who worked for us. "You will be charged today," warned one translator. The day passed uneventfully. Mr. Daniloff has had to live

lacked diplomatic immunity. Initially some assumed that such eye-for-eye behavior was not the Gorbachev way. Thus it made sense for President Reagan to write a private letter to the Soviet leader on the reasonable expectation that he would re-lease Mr. Daniloff, much as Nikita S. Khrushchev had done after President John F. Kennedy vouched for a Yale professor arrested in Moscow in 1963. What seems to have been overlooked is that Mr. Gorbachev is more of a throwback to Josef Stalin than be is to Mr. Khrushchev or to Leonid I. Brezhnev.

At first it seemed perfectly natural that the KGB should try to recover its comrade Mr. Zakharov. After Mr. Daniloff's arrest there seemed to be a chance that the KGB was doing its own thing without Mr. Gorbachev's being fully aware of events. But after Mr. Daniloff was formally charged with espionage, there was no longer any doubt that Mr. Gorbachev himself had become involved and was probably involved from the beginning. If anything, this escalation process brings to mind Mr. Gorbachev's behavior after a defector fingered the Soviet to the Los Angeles Times.

case, unfazed by the fact that he has humiliated and insulted Mr. Reagan by initially ignoring the president's private and public calls for Mr. Daniloff's release.

At first the Reagan administration handled this by talking with a big month but walking with a small stick. Even that surprised Soviet officials, several of whom expressed shock that such a trivial matter might stand in the way of bilateral arms talks. All this suggests that while Mr. Gorbachev undoubtedly has some new ideas, he still is ill equipped and ill advised when it comes to crisis management with the United States. Whatever advice his old American hand Anatoli F. Dobrynin is giving him, it reflects little about the realities of the United States today.

It was always likely that the Soviet Union and Mr. Gorbachev would eventually find some face-saving way to release Mr. Daniloff. But the longer the process, the more inflamed American passions became. Some feared Mr. Reagan would be unable to show the reason and restraint that - despite his rhetoric - he almost always exercises in dealing with the Soviets. The longer the Soviets and Mr. Gorbachev prolonged this and the more serious the charges, the more likely it was that the ultimate loser would not be Mr. Damiloff or Mr. Zakharov, but the new Mr. Gorbachev and, by extension, a more trasting U.S.-Soviet relationship.

Perhaps it is being lost all over the world, which would be ominous. It is an important issue now because there are crosscurrents of narrow interests and larger interests.

Japan has reached the point where it carns and owes itself the larger interests, an old aspiration fulfilled in a way it never expected. To live up to it requires acknowledging a new kind of responsibility, quite simply to others, as self-fulfilment.

This is an American kind of idea, maybe muted now as Americans itel put upon like everybody else, but still demonstrably more valuable than building fortresses. Japan, which so long took security and comfort in isolation, has entered the world. That is not security for fact That is not enough, for itself or for others. It should join.

Terrorism: There Is Another Way to Deal With It

A Golden Age of Diplomacy Has Died With Harriman

By Philip Geyelin

W parisons being out of place on such occasions, the eulogists at next Tuesday's memorial tribute to W. Averell Harriman at the Washington Cathe-dral will no doubt accentuate the positives in his extraordinary record of public service. But a larger, negative, message will not be lost in the telling of Mr. Harriman's life and times, and espe-cially of the part he played defining America's postwar role in the world.

The message is that, in a particular sense, they don't make 'em like that any scale, they don't make 'em like that any more, which is one, big reason why we do not make public policy the way we did in those days. Now, you can say that this is just as well: Times change; it's a much more complex world. Rich, East-ern-scaboard, Ivy League patricians make poor public servants; sated with money-making they that the convent money-making they turn to government work for power-kicks. So, the argument goes, there is no use waxing sentimental over a "golden age" of American diplo-macy conducted by a happy band of Wall Street bankers and lawyers and

State Department careerists. But inverted snobbery can be as blinding as the conventional kind, when it diverts attention from the real missing ingredient: the qualities of mind and character, much more than wealth and social status, that defined the approach of the likes of Averell Harriman to public service in those postwar years.

For Mr. Harriman was not unique. A soon-to-be-published book, "The Wise Men: Architects of the American Century," chronicles the careers of six of those postwar leaders: Mr. Harrinan and Dean Acheson, John J. McCloy and Robert A. Lovett, George Kennan and Charles E. (Chip) Bohlen, They were not all to the manner born, and it is nowhere written that they were necessarily right. Revisionists tell is that they did as much to create the Cold War as they did to create policies and programs to cope with it.

No matter; the anthors, Walter Isaacson and Evan Thomas, recognize the danger of nostalgia for some Periclean age of American diplomacy. Rather, their point is captured in a candid quote from Henry Kissinger: "My generation doesn't produce people in the selfless tradition of a McCloy; we are too nervons and ambitious.

These men did not adhere to a single ideology," the anthors write, Fancy that, in the contemporary conduct of foreign policy. "Free of political patrons, they served only the President," they write. "Even then their loyalty was more to the office than to the man."

Think upon that, as you witness the mad scramble in the Reagan White House to bottle and preserve Rouald Reagan's personal popularity. Try this, as you watch the current rush to trans-

Over the next 15 years, Mr. Harriman negotisted the Geneva accords on Laos and the 1963 Test Ban Treaty, served in two high State Department jobs, con-ducted countiest special missions, and struggled against heavy odds to negoti-ste peace in Vietnam. concerning its origins and objectives. Careful scrutiny must be accorded the question whether, beneath its avowed pacifist sims, the peace movement conceals a drive toward a new German nationalism; whether it represents an attempt by Germans to reassert control over their own military-political destiny, rather than continue to play the role of a (lesser) member in the Atlantic alliance.

Mr. Cohn-Bendit's allusion to his gencration omits the underlying but essen-tial fact that its members no longer wish to be bound by the guilt of their fathers, a "guilt" that led directly to Germany's peculiar geopolitical status (in both East and West) following World War II.

Finally, Mr. Cohn-Bendit deserves praise for identifying one of the most coassistently hypocritical aspects of the peace movement: its Panglossian refusal to acknowledge both the possibility of a real military threat from the East as well as the extent of political repression in Soviet-style societies. (Its resounding si-lence following the declaration of mar-tial law in Poland in December 1981 was appallingly self-serving.) After all - so the argument runs - if the Soviets can be trusted, then there is no real need for Euromissiles stationed on German soil, or for West German participation in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. RICHARD WOLIN.

Brazil's Game of Tit-for-Tat

The report "A Golden Rule in Diplo-macy: Tit-for-Tat" (Aug. 28) reminded me of Brazil. Some years ago, U.S. citizens did not need a visa to enter Brazi Washington, however, decreed that the same should not apply to Brazilians en-tering the United States, whereupon Brasilia then decided that U.S. citizens would require a visa to enter Brazil.

With the typical arrogance of some U.S. State Department officials, who consider any country south of the border either a banana or Mickey Mouse republic, a highly placed U.S. diplomat went to his Brazilian counterpart and did not mince his words at his displeanoticed as all that empty space. What happens, then, when an intelli-gence officer like me undertakes to write a spy novel that will say what it was really like? It's a problem. For a great (deal of life in an intelligence agency is as hundrum as in any other organization. Rather than leaving from the dark bridge of a ship to the deck of the Soviet bridge of a simp to the deck of the Soviet vessel with the hostages aboard, he is more likely to be sitting tired-eyed at his desk that night, proofreading an intelli-gence report. Instead of tossing the live grenade back at the sneering terrorist, he is found argning with a coldhearted fi-nance officer about his expense account. He may have dreamed of exchanging witty banter with his KGB opposite number at cocktails, but instead his wife pulls at his coattail and hisses: "What a bore! Let's get out of here." His loyal subordinate is less likely to be covering him as he runs into the burning building to defuse the bomb than to be sitting across the desk from him imploring that decide to fudge a bit. Despite his carnestness to correct the world's mist derstandings of what he spent his life doing, be may try to emulate the rattling good spy novel on the bedside table. It is probably full of violence. In this respect, spy novels and real life do not often cor The most violent act I encountered during an entire year in one post abroad was carried out by the irascible ambassador. Enraged at the quite proper refus-al of the administrative officer to break regulations on his behalf, the ambassador hurled an inkwell across the room.

Ducking respectfully, the administrative officer watched the bottle whiz by to explode harmiessly on the wall behind him. It was said that a CIA officer who happened to be passing saw this ex-change and, turning pale, had to be helped to the embassy infirmary.

No doubt violent things are more like-ly to happen to a CIA officer than to a Trappist monk. But the KGB is far busi-er and probably happier brutalizing So-viet citizens than CIA officers. For the intelligence officer the pea is more useful than the pistol; the typewriter more useful than the trench knife; the word processor more useful than the laser beam.

Then there is the character of the spy himself. In spy novels, the hero is not allowed to be naive, nor may he do the dumb things a real intelligence officer spends his retirement trying to forget. And the hero, finally, not only must be seen struggling with a tough problem of no small import to page one, but he also must solve it all by himself before the book ends - a rarer accomplishment than the average intelligence officer may care to remember. Of course, no one thinks that cowbey stories are the true history of the American West. So, who cares if the cliches of the spy novel incidentally give us a silly or sinister view of intelligence work?

I suppose it just comes down to the exchange I had with a friend some years ago. I shid that I enjoyed John Le Carré's books but that his highly indi-vidual depiction of the British Secret Intelligence Service hardly resembled the world that I knew. My friend, who had no more at quaintance with actual intelligence work than can be gained by driving past the CIA building, was indignant: "Waddya mean? Of course it's a perfect picture."

Lartigue, French Photographer, Is Dead

By C.G. Cupic ternational Herald Tribun

PARIS --- Jacques Henri Lartigue, 92, a French pioneer of photography, died Friday in a hospital in Nice after a short illness, the Lartigue Foundation announced. Mr. Lartique was known and respected for his fashion coverage, the joyful pictures he took between the world wars of carefree high socicty, and for a diary he kept for 85 years

He often said his real passion was to be a painter, photography was only his hobby. But his family snapshots were works of art.

"I wanted to photograph beauty in life," he said in an interview in 1983. "Everybody else is writing and taking pictures of the dark sides of human nature."

He photographed everything he found beautiful: women, grand hotels at resorts throughout Europe, incury cars, pedigree greyhounds, fashion shows and, most of all, the fun and games that he enjoyed with his relatives and his four wives.

Born into a wealthy family, Mr. Lartigne decided at an early age that he wanted to be an artist. He was given his first camera at the age

From then on he painted, photo-graphed and kept his diary, and when he came of age traveled from one fashionable resort to another. He worked as film assistant and fashion photographer, took physi- claim.

Briton Urges EC Inquiry Into Mafia

Reners

LONDON - A senior member of the Conservative Party demanded on Friday that the government take immediate action on assertions that the Mafia is frandulently obtaining millions of dollars a year from the European Community under its agricultural program.

Teddy Taylor, secretary of the Tory European reform group, said that the foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, who is the current president of the EC Council of Ministers, should order an urgent inquiry into charges by an Italian member of the European Parliament.

The Italian member, Pancrazeo combat fraud and other forms of

Friday for concerted international financial network by harmonizing investigating powers in different member states. At the urging of Mr. de Pasquale, a Communist deputy, the assembly overwhelmingly backed on a show of bands a resolution demanding that EC states step up measures to

A six-page document drawn up by the Brussels Commission last action against the Malia and its year contained no figures, he said. "It resulted from a quick trip around Sicily." he said. "It is really quite ridiculous. We must do something about the people who are swindling EC funds." Mr. Taylor said, "We should first

Early Dutch Landscapes

The National Gallery has brought together 140 early 17th-century drawings and paintings of Dutch landscapes, including many works from private collections that have seldom or never been exhibited. The display shows how the flat Dutch countryside inspired an artistic revolution that continues to make its influence felt. "Dutch Landscape: The Early Years" hopes to show, in what the gallery says is a new approach to the subject, how so-cial, economic and religious change, amid almost peren-nial war, produced new art — a break with the tradition of fortest landscape with the tradition of fantasy landscapes using set color patterns and unreal-istic perspective. "Ecuador, 1982": Sebastiao Salgado's people peer with resignation, patience, faith and hope at a changing world that both calls out to them and rejects them.

Faces of the Other America

by Alan Riding

EBASTIAO Salgado, a 42-year-old photographer who lives in Paris, remained haunt-ed by the faces of the "the other Americas" long after he left his native Brazil in the late 1960s. In 1977, he recalls, "I decided to dive Latin Americas, so mysterious and suffering, so heroic and noble." Over a seven-year period that seemed to take him back centuries, he traveled to Brazil's northeast and through Chile, Bolivia, Bern Founder Contemps and Merice, The phote of the unit Peru, Ecuador, Guatemala and Maxico. The pho-tographs on this page are from the resulting book, "Other Americas," to be published in November by Pantheon Books. by Pantheon Books. The intimacy of Salgado's photographs reflects the patience and passion that he dedicated to taking them. His subsequent photographs of Afri-can famines, which won him praise and prizes, were also the fruit of years spent living and travel-ing within his subject. In his photographs of Latin America, his aim was not to focus on a region's misfortunes, but to show the world as the "other misfortunes, but to show the world as the "other Americans" saw it. Salgado's decision to shoot in black and white was not capricious. He felt that other colors might diarupt the uniformity of "the beliefs, losses and suffering" of this region. His use of light and shadow adds a dimension of unreality that drama-tizes the solemnity, sentimentality and absurd con-tradictions of Latin American societies. The hidden tension in this world is, of course, the inevitability of change. Gradually, the area's ancient spiritual and cultural defenses are being croded by modern-day consumerism and communications. The faces and feelings in Salgado's pho-tographs, therefore, are part of the world that struggles not to change but nonetheless is shrink-ing with every passing year.

The first work in "William Brice: A Selection of Painting and Drawing," dates from 1947, and the most recent from 1986; yet ex-cept for certain crucial subtleties it all might have been concocted somewhere between Long Island and the French Riviera between 1906 and 1950 ---which means it could only have been too the source of life. Preach Riviera between 1906 and 1950 — which means in could only have been painted in Southern California. Brice, 65, the second child of the comedian Fanny Brice and the gambler Nicky Arnstein, taught drawing and painting for two decades at the University of California, Los Angeles. His work brings Richard Diebenkorn to mind not so much because of overt resemblances but because of a realization that the two artists share a sensibility that sees art as a long runination on singular themes. The carliest works on view are two small, carefully ren-dered still lifes of oval-shaped rocks in a shallow space. Works of the past decade have grown huge in scale and seem to alternate between spare, gray exercises in elegant depression and upbeat works where Matisse's snavity combines wryly with Staart Davis' zing.

Growth of Mexican Museum

■ The Mexican Museum on the San Francisco water-front, which started as a community arts project in the pre-dominantly Mexican-American Mission District, has entered a phase of major growth and influence. With 4,800 permanent objects in storage, including a valuable gift of Mexican folk art collected by Nelson Rockefeller, the museum is currently exhibiting the first comprehensive retrospective of the serigraphs, drawings and paintings of Rupert Garcia, to be followed in November by the un-veiling of an extensive pre-Columbian collection. In the Rupert Carcia, to be followed in November by the un-veiling of an extensive pre-Columbian collection. In the past year, grants and donations have almost doubled the museum's budget, which is expected to reach $1 million in 1987. The institution's aims are to collect and exhibit the work of living Mexican-American artists, to preserve artifacts from Mexico's past, and to educate. Garcia, who attained prominence in 1968 with a black-and-white illument protect of the grant of the comment silkscreen poster of the guerrilla leader Che Guevara, stys the images for his early silkscreens and for the vivid pastels be started creating in 1975 were nearly all in-spired by "appropriations from the mass media" — famil-iar photographs of world leaders and events.

Turner Oils, Watercolors

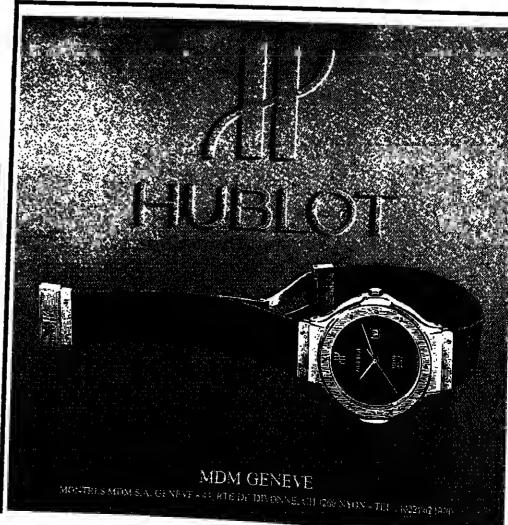

The National Museum of Western Art in Ueno Park has assembled 51 oils and 60 watercolors by J.M.W. Turner in an exhibition of a quality rarely seen outside Europe. Turner's interpretation of the landscape conforms to the crastati erusaic tradition more than those of most West-crn artists; perhaps partly because of this, the exhibition has proved highly popular with Tokyo residents and can be uncomfortably crowded on weekends. Until Oct. 5, then moving to Kyoto Municipal Museum, Oct. 14 through Nov. 16.

Why the Museums Miss the Big Ones In the Art Wars

They are ill-equipped to do so in terms of finance (a much debated point) or market assessment (a problem that is never raised). In recent years they have been on the losing side. Such is the message delivered by the report of the chancellor of the exchanges's Reviewing Committee on the "Export of Works of Art 1984-85," even though that was not its intention.

Presented to Parliament in June this year, it is couched in bland official language and hardly puts events in perspective. Every dealer and collector concerning himself with Old Master drawings of a high order remembers the fraces created by the sale of the Raphaeis, Rembrandts and others from the three-century old collection amassed by the dukes of Devonshire at Chatsworth House. The report describes the pathetic efforts of British institutions to retain some of the works after the Christie's sale of July 3, 1984, when all the big catches were without exception knocked down to foreign museums and their agents.

It discusses an extraordinary drawing of a man threshing beside a wagon, now thought by art historians to be by Rubens. Sold for 5756,000 — when sterling stood at $1.35 — to Artemis Fine Art (U.K.) Ltd., it was submitted for export to the Getty Museum in California. "The value shown on the export license application was £779,520," the report notes in passing, providing an inter-esting indication of a dealer's fee as an agent in an open transaction. The keeper of prints and drawings at the British Museum, acting as the Department of Trade and Industry's expert adviser, "submitted that the drawing was among the finest of all Rubens's studies from nature and that its superlative quality could not be overstated."

Artemis put its case to the Reviewing Committee, which allowed for a few lines of wry British humor. Its representative "did not dispute the drawing's importance al-though he considered that it had a clumsy quality which prevented it from being acs-thetically outstanding." Tough on a milliondollar drawing. More seriously, the applicant remarked that there were few example of Rubens's works in the United States and many in Europe, "the United Kingdom having the greatest quantity of his drawings in public collections." The committee nevertheless recommended that a license be withheld for three months in case a British institution could come up with the required £779,520. None could. The Rubens is now at the Getty.

So is Raphael's "St. Paul Rending His Garments," a study for a tapestry cartoon, one of a famous set of seven in the Royal Collection on extended loan to the Victoria and Albert Museum. The British Museum again wanted it and missed - for a trifling £1.556.800. It likewise missed Rembrandt's admirable "Sailing Boat on a Wide Expanse

Further major departures from the Chatsworth collection included Rembrandt's "Farmstead by a Stream," acquired by the Boston collector George Abrams for £393,120, and Raphael's study of man's head and a hand, at £3,603,600, now in a New York collection.

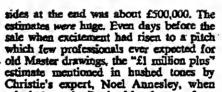

The British Museum has no time limit, it has a short-term budget, and it is a national museum. The arguments put forward to spend the £3.2 million were essentially of an art historical order. To consider spending that money so shortly after having clumsily handled the private negotiation of the Chataworth drawings — which need never have been anctioned — is astonishing. If one adds up all the prices that the British Museum said should be paid for individual drawings from the Chatsworth sale, the amount exceeds by half the lump sum at which the entire selection auctioned at Christie's was still being offered to the Moseum 18 months previously, according to sources linked with the negotiation from beginning to end.

The affair goes back to the end of 1982, when a certain sum was needed by the trust-ees of the Chatsworth Settlement. A small selection of Old Master drawings was drawn from the thousands amassed by the dukes of Devonshire, a kind of mini-Chatsworth. The ides, which appealed to all involved -Christie's experts, the lawyers, the trustees -- was that it should be offered to a provincial museum with a great art collection but no significant Old Master drawings. It was submitted, sources say, to the Ministry of the Arts, which turned it down. Months went by. The negotiators turned to the British Museum, which would have been involved in any case as the principal holder of Old Maste drawings in Britain, and perhaps the second or third in the world. The museum thought Christie's valuation. over £7 million, too high. Agnew's, London's leading firm in Old Master paintings and drawings and run by the same family for six generations, was called in and gave an estimate, quoted by a source as not exceeding £5 million. Christie's experts thought it would not be fair to sell for less than £7 million. That is bow matters stood early in 1983, and negotiations ground to a halt.

The British Museum, sources say, only considered the drawings that would complete its collection, not the selection as a whole from a national angle, when the settlement trustees, annious to see it stay in Brit-sin, indicated that they were prepared to bring down the price by £1 million. "There was remarkably little reaction," a party to the negotiation put it.

It remains that the museum overestimated its maneuvering abilities, for which institu-tions are hardly noted. It was slow on the uptake, as the academic world tends to be, and it was indecisive. The absurdity was to matter a contemptuous "no" in 1982-83, to bleat a lachrymose "yes" to some of the

bought the nation a collection that realized

21.2 million, including the premium. The original position of the museum, that the estimates were too high, may well have been the right one. Too high, that is, from its own perspective or that of the nation, not in terms of the market, concerning which it displayed little competence. A major point not raised in the report or anywhere is that Old Master drawings, like prints, are a spe-cial case. They cannot be displayed perma-nently but only at rare intervals. One might argue that it matters little whether the frail sheets are kept in protective darkness, as they must be, in London, in Washington or any properly equipped place. It matters even less to a museum that already is custodian to probably well over 100,000 drawings, of which well over 99 percent will be in that same darkness at any point in time. This raises the broader but key issue of targeting. It is often assumed that officialdom uses its meager resources for buying art frm the greedy commercial world as best it can. That feeling is seldom shared by art professionals outside the academic world --high powered collectors, dealers, experts, Not a squeak was heard when one of Poossin's greatest paintings was auctioned at Christic's on April 10, 1981. Kept in a condition that makes it almost unique, including its sfumati, because it stayed in the same room at Chatsworth House for 240 years, it was knocked down, masold, at £1,650,000. Norton Simon, that giant in the collecting world, who had been following it from afar, stepped in, and, it is said, because he did not have all the cash available, persuaded Getty to buy it jointly. They did. They now have it

When major English works of art are in volved, they do not necessarily fare better. The borrowing process also worked in reverse. The Polish theater director Jerzy Grotowski ar-gued that efforts to imitate the spectacular effects of cinema were destroying the essence of theater, which he located in the actor's inner conviction. At about the same time, the New Wave in France was attempting to separate film from stage, and from film's history of adapting from literary works, not. through the spectacular, but by a closer relation to everyday reality. Alain Resnais's new film, "Mélo," breaks sharply with that

He gives his dancers the dumbest of lines to speak, then denies the expressioo of their bodies in endless close-ups of their scrunched expressions. He wants the cinema's license for the spectacular and the theater's imaginative freedom, and winds up with neither.

In contrast, Claude Berri's "Jean de Florette" is an outright model of "grand cinema" in the spectacular sense, adapted by Berri and Gerard Brach from the novel hy Marcel Pagnol. In this case the novelist was himself a filmmaker, one severely criticized by the late Andre Bazin for the literary quality of his films. You can tell from the sweaty demeanor of Berri's characters, and Jean's absurdly hlue-shadowed eyes are those of an overgrown child; his exalted voice, proclaiming his arrival in "paradise" has the puff of recruitment fliers, and nei-ther is entirely credible. Depar-dieu's chief resource in his role is his sheer physical presence; even with a made-up hunchback, one can still accept his capacity to work himself to death, which is exactly what Jean does.

Revealingly, to communicate the tragedy of Jean's death, Berri uses the oldest of sentimental tricks, the face of the dead man's angelic daughter. We are on Depardicu's side not because we care about him, or hate Mootand's character, but because of what each represents, innocent faith versus inhuman greed. The loss of Jean de Florette is a tragedy only in the abstract 85 2 5V

EW YORK - The brew of films cooked up for fall and winter is thick with the talent of major directors. Martin Scorsese, Francis Coppola, Roland Joffé, Pe-ter Weir, Brace Beresford, Sidney Lomet, Blake Edwards and Franco Zeffirelli all have new films scheduled to open this season. In addi-tion, there are adaptations of Broadway productions and best-selling novels and a number of interesting independent American films as well as the Hollywood sta-

In Francis Coppola's "Peggy Sne Got Married," Kathleen Turner plays a woman in her 40s who goes to her high school reunion and is transported back to 1960, where she has the chance to live her life over retaining her present memory. It is the closing feature of this year's New York Film Festival, which runs from Sept. 19 to Oct. 5

Roland Joffé goes back to South America two centuries ago in "The Mission," which tells of a priest and a former slave trader who join forces against the colonial governments of Spain and Portugal to save an endangered Indian tribe. The British film, which won the Golden Palm award at Cannes this year, stars Robert DeNiro and Jeremy Irons.

Peter Weir takes us to Central America for "The Mosquito Coast," based on Paul Theroux's best-selling novel about a man's obsession to remove his family from the corrupting influences of modern civilization. The film stars Harrison Ford.

Bruce Beresford and Sidney Lumet have directed films that take place in the present-day United States, Beresford's "Crimes of the Heart" is an adaptation of Beth Henley's 1981 Pulitzer prize-winning play about three Southern sis-

It is certainly not a tribute to the actors. Among its chief characters, only Daniel Auteuil, as the son of a wealthy peasant (Yves Montand) who callously commits murder and fraud to get his hands on a neighboring property, and Elisabeth De-pardiea, as the tenderly faithful wifo of the starry-eyed petty bu-reaucrat (Gerard Depardieu in the title role) who inherits the land from Montand's victim, allow the viewer to forget that this is just a movie (which is the sort of thing one should remember only on leaving).

Montand has lately fallen into the habit of playing all his roles as a man who knows he is smarter than anyone else. He would not get away with it here if Autenil's peculiarly crafty simplicity were not there to support him. You can see from the suppressed twitches on Auteuil's rope.

The first film by the Russian poet Yevgeoy Yevtusheoko, "Dietski Sad" ("Kindergarten," billed in Paris as "Le Jardin d'Enfants"), is of interest primarily because it shows how far the nowdissident, now-officially honored artist has internalized the official aesthetic known as "socialist realism." A large part of the movie is composed of heroic tableaux of workers, soldiers, children, old women, all encountered by a boy forced to flee Moscow as the German armies approach in the sum-mer of 1941. On these honest faces, Yevtushenko's appallingly sentimental narration repeatedly tells us, can be found the answer to the question "Do the Russians want a war?" Luxury Service Attracts French Rail Customers

By George Gudauskas

ARIS --- The French national railroad is calling its experiment with executive-class service a success one year after La Nouvelle Première began. The tryout, involving a four-hour run between Paris and Strasbourg, started last September as an effort to lure back first-class passengers lost over the past decade.

The experiment centered on the food service, but improved station-to-station service also was an important goal. "It's a success," said Brigitte Morelle, a spokesperson for SNCF, the French national railroad

"It's always full," she said, adding that business people and politicians use the train the most, traveling to and from the European Parliament in Strasbourg.

She said the new first-class was "a good experience for us" because of possible broader application, such as improved services on other trains

Over the years, speed, comfort and frequen cy have been improved to gain riders, with the high-speed TGV (train à grande vitesse) being the workhorse since 1981.

But food has been a source of complaint, Now, after a year of experience with La Nouvelle Première, a solution may be at hand. Miss Morelle said train officials will weigh passenger comments about the new service before making any changes on other trains. Important for them is the most-frequent complaint: While the food in La Nouvelle Première is very good, it also is very expensive, maybe too expensive, when the price is added to an already high-priced rail ticket. One-way fare between Paris and Strasbourg is about 440 francs (about $66). That is even more expensive than normal first-class seating.

The cost of dinner in the train's restaurant adds 300 to 400 francs to the bill. Although passengers can save money by eating at their seats, there is a drawback. There is no choice of menu, and one dish serves all.

Some say the food served in the dining car is worth the cost. Joel Robuchon, owner and chef of the three-star restaurant Jamin, directs its preparation. Henri Gault, a food critic, was consulted along with other "outsiders" who were asked to contribute ideas to ensure the success of the

Mr. Gault worked with Sorenolif, the designated caterer, to come up with a cuisine considered suitable for serving aboard La Nouvelle Première.

While good food is attracting many voyag-ers, service is doing its share, too, rail officials said.

Their idea of service is to make readily available such things as baggage handlers, tax-is, rental cars, hotel rooms, newspapers, telephones and even small computers. A French Minitel is aboard the train so that passengers can call up information en route,

These services are offered in the stations' club-like waiting lounges and on the train itself. Both places have a comfortable and relaxing atmosphere.

The decorator, François Catroux, created the surroundings. He chose a contemporary decor. The train's bar is done in black and ochre tones and finished in copper, producing an "upscale urban" effect.

ONDON - A conference center in Europe can mean anything from a 5.000-seat auditorium to a high-tech management center designed for staff use but rented sometimes to favored groups. Definitions are tighter in the United States.

A large meeting complex is usually called a convention center --- a flat-floor facility used for a trade show or, with risers and bleachers. for a large meeting. Chicago's McCormick Place, for instance, can seat 25,000. The centers are useful for certain corporation activities, such as launching a major product or bolding a stockholders meeting.

Asian Airports Are Modern, Inviting

By Paul Zach

INGAPORE - Airports usually rank high on travelers' lists of unavoidable annoyances, ordeals to be endured then forgotten.

In the Far East and Southeast Asia, it is different Indicative of a region that is on a fast track for the future, the airports in several Asian capitals are not just ultramodern and efficient, they are downight inviting. Most representative is Singapore's Changi International Airport. Opened in 1981 at a cost of $800 million, Changi is a model of how to build and operate an airport. The 103,000-member International Airline Passengers Association ranks it second-best in the world in terms of rapid baggage handling, quick and convenient check-in procedures, fast customs checks, easy transfers and short walk-ing distances. Only Amsterdam's Schiphol carned a higher rating, no doubt because more association members have been there.

Upon disembarking through passageways directly into Changi's clean, cool corridors, passengers are swept along moving walkways through immigration, where officers are trained to facilitate rather than impede the flow of travelers.

Within minutes, visitors who manage to by-pass the temptations of duty-free shops will find themselves in the baggage claim area, where there are porters who do not expect tips and ample, free luggage carts. Security checks are thorough but equally fast and pleasant when boarding at Changi. Taxi stands and car-rental kiosis are nearby and bus bays one floor down. A sizable percentage of the island's 11,000 clean, air-conditioned taxis always seems to be stationed at the airport, so there is little waiting. It is a 20minute ride costing about $12 (including the airport surcharge) along the Pan Island Expressway or East Coast Parkway to the central city hotels.

Changi includes a business center that is open from 8:30 A.M. to 10 P.M. and offers secretaries, translators and interpreters, telex, telefax and cable services, and word-processing facilities. It also has meeting rooms equipped with audio-visual equipment and business machines.

The airport also has 49 shops, nine restanrants, two 24-hour clinics, a children's playd, nursery rooms and even a supermarket. There are 13 day-rooms available at $15 to $25 per six hours plus $7.50 for use of shower facilities

A second passenger terminal is under con-struction and will double Changi's capacity to 20 million passengers annually when it opens in 1989 to cater mainly to the Malaysian Airlines system and Singapore Airlines flights, Tokyo's new international airport at Narita has most of the features of Singapore's airport on an even larger, almost overwhelming scale. Unfortunately, it is much less pleasant.

Although its facilities are excellent, it re-quires heavy security because of the sometimes violent campaign by farmers, environmental-ists and students to close the airport, and the bureaucracy in getting through immigration is excessive. Customs is more easygoing, requir-ing only an oral declaration. Getting back into the airport involves a security check at the gate which, if you are on a bus, means getting off and on again. Narita is 40 miles (64 kilometers) from the center of Tokyo; one-way taxi fare costs at least 16,000 yen ($103). Limousine buses make the trip for 2,500 yen, and the Keisi Line skyliner nonstop train costs 1,500 yen.

One major convenience is the Tokyo air terminal where some airlines have baggage

The most welcome airport in the region is Jakarta's.

check-in facilities for Narita passengers. Othcheck-m facilities for Narita passengers. Oth-erwise, the ABC baggage service (telephone: 545-1131) will pick up luggage and take it to Narita for 3,000 yen for two pieces not exceed-ing 67 pounds (about 30 kilograms). Businessmen on tight schednles should plan their appointments around a motor-vehicle ride to or from Narita that can take from 90 minutes to 21/2 hours. Thus passengers on brief transit stops should plan to stay in Narita rather than try to take a quick look at Tokyo.

The approach to Hong Kong's Kai Tak International Airport, over the glittering is-lands in the turquoise waters off the Chinese mainland, can be breathtaking. It can also be heart-stopping. Kai Tak is crammed into an impossibly small area amid a dense concentration of high-rises in Kowloon. There is just a single runway that juts 10,820 feet (3,300 meters) into Kowloon Bay.

Deplaning and embarkation at Kai Tak is relatively smooth and simple. A $270-million improvement project is under way that by 1988 will include a much-needed new baggage hall and two new baggage reclaim loops at the arrival levels, an enlarged departure hall with two new check-in islands, extended lounges and more restaurants

Kai Tak is less than 10 minutes from Kowloon's Tshimshatsni tourist district and about 15 minutes from the central business district and hotels on Hong Kong island. Metered taxis charge about 13 Hong Kong dollars (about $23) to Tsimshatsui and about 55 Hong Kong dollars to the central city, including the 20-dollar surcharge for the ride through the underwater tunnel to Hong Kong island. There is a charge of 50 cents to one dollar for each suitcase, depending on size. Outside Tokyo, Hong Kong and Singapore, there are an increasing number of direct inter-national flights through Seoul, Taiwan and Bangkok.

Like much of South Korea, Seoul's Kimpo International Airport is already primping for the 1988 Summer Olympics. It is an easy half-hour, 3,000-won (about $3.40) taxi ride into the city or a 500-won ride on the Walker Hill express bus although most hotels provide free van service. An added attraction for businessmen is a trade center office in the terminal.

Taiwan's Chiang Kai-shek International Airport is another functional, new terminal. It is in Taoyuan, 25 miles from Taipei, but the trip into town is fast, costing about $22 (800 Tarwan dollars) by cab.

Taiwan dollars) by cab. The renovation of the Bangkok Internation-al Airport in Don Muang is scheduled for completion next year. A new domestic termi-nal is already operational for those who want to avoid Bangkok's traffic jams and fly directly to Thailand's Chiang Mai mountain resorts or Phuket Beach resorts.

You can be in the city, about seven miles from the airport, within 45 minutes. The offi-cial taxi price is 300 baht (about $11), but self-employed drivers will make the trip to Bangkok for as little as 100 baht.

The Manila International Airport opened in 1982, but the comption and turnoil of the Marcos years made for a poorly finished, poor-ly maintained facility. But it is well laid-out and is located in metropolitan Manila's Pasay

City, only 20 minutes from the city center. Malaysia's Subang International Airport is 14 miles from Kuala Lampur. Its tourist information center is one of the region's best and is the open until 11:30 P.M.

The newest, most welcome airport in the region is Jakarta's Soekarno-Hatta Interna-tional. Although it located in Cengkareng, about 12 miles away, it is a vast improvement over the old Halim facility. Access to the city is fast along a new toll road. Taxi fare is about 12,000 rupish (about $19), including toll and an airport surcharge. The $350-million facility, which opened in April 1985, was designed by Aeroport de Paris with corridors connecting the departure lounges and arrival halls open to balmy rural breezes.

However, Indonesia's immigration counters are not yet computerized and long lines are possible. The designers also neglected to incor- 1porate restrooms into the departure hall area, which can be a major problem when flight delays prohibit passengers from checking-in and proceeding to the main terminal.

From September, Japan Air Lines increases its frequency of non-stop flights from Europe to Japan.

So now you can fly non-stop from London on Tuesdays and from Pans on Saturdays and Sundays. And during the busy month of October the Thursday flight from Paris is also non-stop.

Convenient evening departures mean that connections from other European cities are easy and the journey time of under twelve hours makes this the fastest route to Japan. JAL also operates from ten other European cities and has at least 26 flights a week to Japan. There is a daily service from London and Paris.

The facts are impressive. But it's our serene efficiency and traditional Japanese hospitality that make that one step to Tokyo so pleasant.

been adjusted to meet demand. Terminal 4 is also offering a free children's play center for passengers with small children in the departure lounge. The center, the only such facility at Heathrow, will be able to accommodate about 35 children. It is sponsored by Volvo Concessionaires Ltd.

All these changes are designed to make life easier for the seven million passengers passing through the terminal on an annu-al basis. This is just under its total capacity of eight million, slightly more than a quarter of the 31 million passengers who use Heathrow every year.

For passengers, transfer to the other terminals is provided by a bus service, which leaves for Terminal One every five minutes and the other terminals every seven minutes. All trips take about 12

In addition to easy access, Terminal 4 has also incorporated sophisticated security measures. They include the segregation of arriving and departing passen-gers on different floors — a procedure not used at the other terminals.

ONDON - The general standard of business hotels has improved considcrably in recent years. There are, it is true, still far too many venerable establishments, especially in Europe, that live on past reputations. Equally deplorable is the fact that so many of the new hotels built in the past few decades are ugly concrete boxes, hur-needly constructed to take advantage of a boom that in some cases, for example the Gulf, has turned out to be short-lived.

But the major chains have made a genuine effort to recognize the special needs of business travelent and many cities now have excellent hotels. Some, like Singapore and Hong Kong, have too many rather than too few.

"Best" is inevitably a subjective judgment. Everyone has favorite hotels and the definition of best is often based on reassuring familiarity. Some people think that the Plaza is New York's finest; others prefer a smaller hotel like the Mayfair Regent or the Ritz-Carlton. Many visitors to London would never dream of staying anywhere but the Connaught; others are equally attached to the Inn on the Park or the Dorchester. The George V in Paris has a devoted following; so does the Pisza Athenée. There is, however, a common factor - qual-

I firmly believe that a business traveler is entitled to a reasonable standard of luxury. I see no reason why he should voluntarily exchange the comforts built into his private do-main for misery abroad. I don't want to be locked up in a room that is little more than a filing cabinet, and I don't want to be treated just as another room number. Happily, many big hotels now offer separate executive floors and wings. Hyatt pioneered this "hotel within a hotel" concept and it has since been copied by others. Some have spa-cious club lounges with a bar and afternoon ed Claude Blair, one di historians of medical tea, a concierge and even a special elevator. Others merely offer upgraded rooms and a , the existence of the the of metal sculpture with small public area that gets overcrowded when a sel, it now graces the one dozen guests try to use it at once. But these S. Lauder, currently [] cases are generally worth the extra cost. Austria, In 1984, a min

A more recent move is the introduction of nonsmoking floors. Many hotels have also tightened security through the use of computer-programmed, keyless locking systems. Another welcome innovation is the "business center." Standards vary, but the best, like that in Sydney's splendid Regent Hotel, offer full secretarial services, telex, stock-market and news-wire reports and a reference library.

Business centers are particularly helpful when you do not speak the language - a translator is usually on hand to help in making local appointments. Translators will also take messages, a service for which I am especially grateful because so many hig hotels have an annoying tendency to lose important messages or deliver them hours late,

There has also been a great improvement in convention facilities. So many new convention centers have been built around the world, together with satellite hotels, that competition for this type of business is tough. Organizers have become more demanding, and every effort is being made to please them. Two hotel groups that set themselves com-mendably high standards wherever they oper-ate are the Four Seasons and the Mandarin Oriental, Better-known chains like Hilton, Hyatt, Intercontinental, Sheraton and Trusthou Forte also have some fine properties, but they are not as consistently good because they cater to a much broader market.

Some try to win and retain the loyalty of business travelers with VIP plans. To qualify, you must be able to show that you use their hotels for a certain number of nights each year. Benefits vary, but they generally include pref-erential room rates, expedited check-in and extended check-out time, and wherever possible an upgrading to better accommodation at no extra charge.

In my experience, there is often a gap between what is promised and what actually happens when you arrive at one of the hotels; staff sometimes give your card only a cursory glance and proceed to treat you exactly like everyone else. But the VIP plans can be useful, especially in cities where there is heavy room hand

In the United States there has been a wel-come move to develop small, European-style hotels that cater primarily to the individual business traveler. Many refuse to take groups. They may not have business centers and health clubs, but they provide an elegant, intimate atmosphere and are often far superior to many hostelries in Europe.

In New York, the Carlyle, the Mayfair Regent and the Ritz-Carlton are good examples of this type of hotel. Washington has the Hay-Adams, the Madison and the Ritz-Carlton.

In many cases, the owner is a multimillionaire who thought it would be a good idea to buy an old hotel -- one long past its prime --and turn it into something the rich would like. John Coleman, owner of the Ritz-Carlton, says he tries to cater to "quiet American money and a large European following." But some of the chains have also been experimenting with clubby hotels

I tend to prefer them because I like the personal touch they provide. My pet aversion is the mammoth hotel that is regularly invaded by large gatherings of boisterous convention-CCIS.

Choosing the Right Travel Agency Can Be a Crucial Company Decision

By Roger Collis

ompanies looking for a travel agent, "should look with the same set of standards that they apply when choosing an accountant, a lawyer or any other professional consultant," said Gerald Fernback, managing director of Embassy Travel in London and president of the Universal Federation of Travel Agents Associations. "They must also have a clear idea as to what it is they're seeking; economy above all else or the best service standards for the people they're sending to travel." It seems obvious, but it needs to be said. Given the complexity and cost of business travel, choosing a travel agent can be a crucial business decision. This is hardly surprising when, according to the American Express 1984/5 Survey of Business Travel, travel and entertainment is the third largest controllable expense after salaries and data processing. It is estimated that U.S. companies will spend $100 billion on travel by 1990.

Companies should select an agent according to their special needs. For example, a consulting firm that charges its out-of-pocket travel expenses to its clients may be more concerned about efficient service than saving money. A manufacturing company may want to shop around for the best rebate on total travel expenditure. Another company may be interested in getting a maximum discount on hotels, or special expertise with sales meetings and trade fairs. Influence with an airline on a frequently traveled route or knowledge of a certain geographical area may be a deciding factor.

A good travel agent can save his clients money by hunting through the jungle of airline fare structures for the best deal. One way is to exploit promotional fares offered on some routes. Another is the creative use of normal fares by including a more distant point on a ticket (to which one does not actually travel) to take advantage of variations in government-adjusted fares or soft currencies, without losing flexibility. Another way is by "combined jour-ney ticketing" by which separate trips are booked in advance on the same ticket.

Several agents have united to obtain bulk discounts for hotel rooms. For example, Woodside, a Boston-based consortium of 65 travel agents, offers clients up to 50 percent of regular rates in 8,000 hotels worldwide. The following is a selection of services one should expect from a business travel agent; · An around-the-clock, on-line computerized information and reservations service. Leading travel agents have high-tech systems, such as Travicont/DPAS and Viewdata and Videotex, which provide instant access to the reservation centers of all major airlines, prices and information on availability, ticketing and itineraries. It should be noted, however, that some agents' systems are biased toward a particular airline and may only show competitors' flights as a last resort or not at all.

· Hotel discounts and reservations, a service that is often neglected by corporate clients. An agency should be able to get the corporate rate or better at hotels with which it has a volume

• A direct-line phone paid for by the agent. Depending on the size of a client's travel budget, an agent may also provide a VDT enabling clients to call up airline fares and seat avail-ability themselves. For those spending more than, say, $300,000, some agents may suggest an "in-plant," a person on their payroll who works directly at a company's office. • A reliable door-to-door delivery service for tickets, visas and other travel documents. Packages for conferences, trade fairs and exhibitions. Expertise on travel incentives. Travel insurance. Corporate discounts for rsonal accident, baggage and medical ex-DCUSCS.

· Health. Advice and information on shots and other precautions. Details of climate and veather conditions.

· Special services, Membership in airline VIP clubs, especially exclusive ones like Swissair: a meet-and-preet service at major airports; free help with visas and passports; the-ater tickets, and no service charge on travelers

 Travel pattern analyses. A customized management report showing how much money the agent is saving a firm monthly, by compar-ing the normal fare with the fare offered. Typically, this will be categorized by traveler, department, destination and by type of travel service, i.e., airlines, hotels and car rentals, as ell as showing entertainment expenses.

Before choosing a travel agent, companies should develop a travel policy. This means looking closely at travel expenditures to find out which airlines and hotel groups they most, often use, A travel policy will establish which airline class, grades of hotel and rental car companies to use and daily spending allow-

Next a company should invite prospective agents to discuss its account and to propose ways to save money. Before choosing an agent, it should establish the standards of service expected. Once an agent is chosen, it is wise to stick with him since it makes sense to concentrate purchasing power and to have a single administrative channel.

According to the American Express survey, a majority of companies said they look for staff proficiency more than any other service. "An agent is only as good as the operator who deals with you," Mr. Fernbeck said. "There should also be only one person in the company working with the agent." Ideally, this person should be a travel spe-cialist who understands the market, administers a company's travel policy and supervises the agent.

"If you have a dozen individuals booking direct," Mr. Fernback said, "you can have two executives from the same company, traveling in the same plane on the same route and paying different fares."

According to Mr. Fernback, many companies fail to get the most from their travel agents because they do not plan trips enough in ad-vance. "I believe they should consult with their agent, outlining what they're planning to do over the next couple of years in geographic terms, so that we can come back with suggestions how to maximize your appearance and minimize your cost," he said.

"For instance, if I know that you are planning a campaign in Brazil next March. it gives me an opportunity to look at that market and say, "Why don't you make it February, because there's a big fair at that time, with special travel arrangements and a gathering of unique peo-ple," he added.

Competition in the business travel market has become so intense that agents woo corpo-rate chents with lavish promises of cost savings, improved services, management information reports, extended credit terms - for instance, 45 to 60 days - and rontinely give rebates of 2 percent to 3 percent to clients on their total travel expenditures.

The problem is that however high a discount may be, a company can never be sure that its agent is choosing the most economical way to go. Agents carn "override" commissions on some carriers and routes, which can be as high as 40 percent. Apart from not passing them on, they may be biased in sending someone on a more expensive ronting. This is another reason for having an in-house travel professional.

"The worst mistake yon can make is to appoint an agency on the basis of a presentation and then just leave them to it, said Arthur Lyddall, corporate travel administrator at Chevron in London. "In a very short time, they won't be able to keep their promises because the market changes. Unless you know about it. yourself, how can you judge their performance."

One of the best ways to keep a travel agency on its toes is to shop around for discounts, especially with hotel chains and car rental firms, Large companies can invariably cut the best deals by dealing directly, It can even make sense for small businesses which may find they have more purchasing power by concentrating on one hotel chain or by patronizing one hotel in a city frequently visited. Direct discounts are possible even with airlines.

exaggerated. abuffed the suggestion of Jac-ques Chinac, the French prime minister, that West Germany should bring down its interest rates. West, Mr. Kohl said, was the business of the central bank, and the Bundesbank's autonomy had served West Germany well. However, Mr. Stoltenberg, a few hours before the Kohl-Chirac methog, put the relationship more candidly: "The federal gov-enument and the Bundesbank," he said, "practice agreed and confistent policies and judge national and international situations and problems jointly.

However one describes the relationship between them relationship analogous to that of the Federal Reserve Board and the administration - neither the West German government nor the Bundesbank is willing to play the role of "economic locomo-tive" being thrust upon them from the outside.

Even within Germany, pressures are building on the govern-ment to do more about unemployment. The former chancellor, Helunut Schundt, a Social Democrat, in his swan song to the Bundestag, lambasted Mr. Kohl on Wednesday for failing to keep his promise to bring down unemployment. Yet Mr. Schmidt, as chancellor in the late 1970s and early 1980s, was himself scathing toward U.S. efforts to cast West Germany in the role of "locomotive" for the Western economies.

HAT is involved in this dispute over policy are not only different national interests, but different theories on how to promote domestic and international prosperity and different national values on the choices among inflation, unemployment and economic growth.

The widespread view in West Germany is that Keynesian, or, for that matter, Reaganite, policies to spur economic growth, even when used in periods of sluggishness and memployment, are likely to cause inflation followed by worse memployment

This traditional conservative view is reinforced by the deepscated German fear and hatred of inflation. The hyperinflation after World War I, which wrecked the economy and paved the way for Nazism, is the great German national economic trauma. The corresponding U.S. trauma is the stock market crash of 1929 and the mass unemployment of the Great Depression.

But are West German fears of inflation, and of countercyclical fiscal and monetary policy as inflation's potential cause, well founded and justified in the present coonomic situation? Washington's view is that the fear is premature and exaggrant-

ed, at a time of high uncouployment and singgish growth, espocially with the Deutsche mark approciating. As Washington aces it, the economy of the entire industrial would is in jeopardy. The United States, by its stimulative fiscal and monetary policies lifted the world economy out of the deep and dangerous shump of 1981-82. The West Germans, the Japanese and the others piggyplacked on that American climb uphill. But now the deep U.S. deficit, the necessity of narrowing the See SCENE, Page 17

TSB Price Set at £1 Per Share Private Issue Is

U.K.'s Largest By Joe Joseph

LONDON -- Trastee Savings Bank said Friday that it planned to raise about £1.27 billion ($1.88 biltion) next month in the biggest pri-vate share offering ever in London. The bank is offering its entire cspital of 1.47 billion shares at £1 each. They will go on sale next week and dealings on the London Stock Exchange are expected to begin on Oct. 8.

The net proceeds, after deduct-ing free shares to employees and expenses, are put at £1.27 billion. In a flamboyant ceremony to launch the offering, Britain's big-gest outside the denationalization program, the bank released thou-sands of balloons in London's financial district TSB, which is forecasting preter profits of £210 million in the fiscal year ending Nov. 20, hopes to attract at least a million buyers. It said payment for the shares will be in two installments, half now and the rest by September 1987. The announcement of the share price came amid plunging prices in London and other leading stock markets, triggered by Thursday's record 86.61-point decline on the New York Stock Exchange. But John Tyce, a banking analyst at Laing & Cruickshank, s brokerage firm, said the sale was now aggressively but not impossibly Dit The sale would create the sec-ond-biggest catalogue of share-holden since British Telecom PLC was denationalized in 1984. TSB, founded as a movement of savings banks in 19th century Scotiand, has had a tortuces journey to the marketplace, and controversy still surrounds the government's decision to let it go on sale. The offering, originally sched-uled for last February, was repeatedly delayed as TSB's depositors filed rival suits in court saying that they owned TSB's surplus assets and that the government had no authority to allow the sale.

On July 3, the House of Lords, Britain's final court of appeal, cleared the way for the sale when it

Aspen Institute Looks to Europe

By Axel Krause nal Herald Tribune

VENICE - Since the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies began organizing conferences for American business and political leaders in 1949, its approach has been simple yet unusual: It invites a small group to spend a week together exploring crucial issues in the most isolated and scenic surroundings possible.

Now that group is determined to become more influential in Western Europe, particularly in the area of economics, it is actively expanding its ties to the other side of the Atlantic.

Organizers moved the site of their annual world economic seminar last week from the group's summer base in Aspen, Colorado, to a heavily guarded building on the Venetian island of San Giorgio. The gathering included excursions to the sur-rounding islands of Venice, candidit dinners in 17th-century palaces and a gala evening at the Verona opera.

About 50 people attended, virtually all holding influential positions in government and business. They included Paul A. Volcker, chairman of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board; Claude Cheysson, who oversees the European Community's relations with developing countries; Arthur Dunkel, director general of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade; Gary Hart and Albert Gore Jr., two Democratic U.S. senators; Felix G. Rohatyn, a senior partner at Lazard Frères & Co., and Robert S. McNamara, chairman of the Overseas Develop-ment Council, who previously was president of the World Bank and U.S. defense secretary.

Economy By Rich Miller

Renters TOKYO - Prime Minister Yasubiro Nakasone pledged Friday to restructure Japan's society and comonny to reduce its massive trade surplus and make it a truly international state. Outlining his policy goals in a major speech to the Dict, Japan's Darha ent, Mr. Nakasone said Japan must fundamentally reform evcrything from education to taxes if it wants to avoid being ostracized by the rest of the world.

"It is essential that we not seem to simply reap the benefits of international peace and prosperity but that we bear our fair share of the burden and contribute to the international good," he told the extraordinary session of the Diet. After saying that he was over-whelmed by his election victory in July, Mr. Nalasone expressed concent about the trade surplus and said Japan urgently needed to overhaul its export-driven economy. France Warns U.S. on EC Farm Issue trade." Downtown, Robert Ludwig of Salomon Brothers, a lanky West Virginian with thinning red hair, sat almost motionless, a perputually perpleted expression on his face amid the constant shouting of other traders around him.

"We haddled all of our people about three times this morning during the worst of it and just went through a checklist of all our variables to make sure we were on top of everything," he said. "That's all you can do in a market like this."

By midday, the market had plunged more than 60 points to-ward its record descent of 86.61 points, forcing traders around Wall Street to swallow deep and fight to keep their heads.

Taking risks is essential to the business of people like Mr. Mendez and Mr. Ludwig, who have made the fast-paced stock-trading game their careers.

The plunge on Thursday was set in motion long before most Ameri-cans had climbed out of bed. While New York slept on Wednesday night, bond prices began to drop in Tokyo, and then in London, on general concerns that central banks might not force interest rates lower, as some had expected. The selling of dollar-denominated bonds abroad had reached such crescendo by the time the U.S. markets opened that Treasury bond and bond futures contracts were immediately manled. Within minutes there was a plunge in bond futures, which sent traders in Chicago sourrying to the nearby stock index futures pits, where they began to sell the stock formes, too. That mayhem quickly spread to the stock market.

"It took us about 4 or 5 minutes," said Mr. Balduzzi, "But that was about $23 million in the line. It was a lot of risk and we were very nervous until it got done."

A few minutes after the 4 P.M. close of the New York Stock Exchange, Bruce C. Hackett, co-director of equity trading at Salomon Brothers, gathered some of his top traders to decide how to advise the firm's Tokyo and London traders on what to expect on Friday. The ocws was grint.

Washington Past Service SOUTH BEND, Indiana - This is no simple situation of a new coach trying to make things right again for a school's football team. The magnitude of Lou Holtz's mission at Notre Dame seems only a bit less significant than Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal. After five years of being mediocre and sometimes downright embarrassing under Coach Gerry Fanst, Notre Dame will begin to find out if it can return to its previously accustomed place of prominence. Holtz begins his season here Saturday at Notre Dame Stadium with three tailbacks on the roster, none of whom has ever played the position in a college game, a starting fullback who has barely played, three starting offensive linemen who have rarely played and a quarterback many of the locals think can't play a lick, even though he, at least, has been around awhile.

By Michael Wilbon

Oh, yes, Holtz and his Irish will begin the season against Michigan, the third-ranked team in the county, then play a bunch of other top-20 caliber teams. There is a very good chance the Irish won't be very good at all. So the Notre Dame fans, of whom there are greater numbers than for any other college football team, don't expect much - just that the Irish contend for the national title right away. Holtz brings to Notre Dame 16 years of college coaching experience --- 16 more than Faust had when he took over --- as well as toned-down one-liners, a few magic tricks to loosen up practice sessions and a resume that says be has won 64 percent of his games (116-65-5), even though three of the schools where he spached were losers before he arrived

Hoitz also brings this warning: "We're not a top 20 football team right now by any stretch of the imagina-tion. I'd rather be honest and realistic right now than to be constantly apologizing each week why we aren't national champions. Pil never underestimate our football team. I haven't said that we cannot win. I haven't said we don't expect to win. All I'm saying is that we have a lot of questions."

The questions are whether Holtz can do anything to help the players regain the confidence they say they lost under Fanst and, if he succeeds, whether that will translate into victories for Notre Dame once again. "Just having a new coach here makes it easier for the recent disappointments to fade away," senior quarter-back Steve Benerlein said. "We started each senson with Coach Faust very confident, too. But there were just so many disappointments."

Notre Dame was certainly in need of a change. The last time the Irish were seen, they were being ripped apart on national television - a 58-7 loss at Miami pt ended their season at 5-6.

To put it into perspective, Notre Dame has had only five losing seasons since 1933 and Fanst (record: 30-26-1) had two of them. Faust resigned the week of the Miami game and was replaced two days later by Holtz.

"The Miami week was about as low as I've ever been," said Wally Kleine, a senior defensive tackle. "I had dreamed about coming to Notre Dame all my life, to play in Cotton Bowls and compete for the national championship. It was incredible."

Because Notre Dame's football team is "America's to come to Notre Dame."

Lou Holtz's Mission: Resurrect the Glory of Notre Dame Team," the football coach here occupies one of the most demanding positions in all of sports. The three coaches who stayed the longest — Knnte Rochne, Frank Leahy and Ara Parseghian — all won at least 84 percent of their games. The alumni drove out Dan Devine for going 53-16-1. Under Fanst who came to Note Dema after each

Under Faust, who came to Notre Dame after coaching at Cincinnati's Moeller High School, the disappointments and frustrations grew rapidly. "After my first year (1984), we knew it would be only one more year and it would be over," junior receiver Tim Brown said. "We just thought be was in over his head. It's a big jump from Moeller High School to Notre Dame."

It appeared that players who were great in high school were mediocre under Faust. "I think that's safe to say," Kleine said. "I'm not sure they had regressed. But I'm also not sure we as a team thought we could do it anymore."

Now, though, there are already major differences on and off the field, and Kleine remembers the first moment the startling transition began. "Coach Faust came in right before Christmas break and stid goodbye to the team," Kleine said. "We were all shumped in our seats and Coach Holtz came in to sty helic to the team and he mid The first thing in the say hello to the team and be said, The first thing is, take your hats off and sit up in those chairs.' We knew he meant business."

Holtz is an affable, approachable man. But he doesn't walk in and out of the offices, as Faust did, saying hello to every person by name and asking each one how his or her day has been going. On the field, the differences are just as noticeable.

Under Fanst, the quarterback often took too long in the huddle during games. Starting Saturday, the 25-second clock won't be running down to :02 before the center snap. Holtz's team will still do a lot of dropback passing, but it is expected to be quick-hitting, Brown, a player of immense talent, was virtually unused the past two years. That will change.

Last season, the defense produced a grand total of sacks. And the offense, as Brown said, was "Allen Pinkett right, Pinkett left, Pinkett up the middle. And throw if it's third down and more than five."

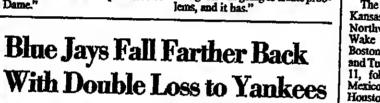

Holtz is a tactician. He forces opponents to deal with the talents of exceptional players such as Brown. And Holtz may call some option plays, although his quarterback doesn't seem especially suited to it. Lou Holtz is having the time of his life.

At William and Mary, North Carolina State, Arkansas and Minnesota, he said, "the first thing I had to do was sell tickets and drum up support for the program. Notre Dame doesn't need me to sell tickets. Notre Dame needs a football coach right now,"

Holtz has been hearing about Notre Dame since he was in third grade in East Liverpool, Ohio, and the nuns at his school marched to the Notre Dame fight

"I swear this is true," Holtz said. "We had a jukebox. there that played only one record - the Notre Dame fight song. They played the thing at recess, at lunch, at dismissal. And you'd better look straight ahead, "I would have been content to spend the rest of my

Headaches Over NCAA Ticket Rule

By Doug Tucker The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Missouri - At the 1985 NCAA convention, there were 145 agenda items. This was the gist of the 85th: "Division 1 football and basketball players will no longer get four free tickets to each home game. Instead, they will be able to put four names for each game on a pass list. Only a player's family members or fellow students may use the passes."

The measure created only a little stir among the 1,300 delegates; they approved it by show of hands. Hoping to stop players from sell-ing their free tickets, a common abuse found by investigators, they had created bylaw 3-1-g (3). But now 20 months later, many are em-barrassed to think they may have created an administrative Frankenstein while making themselves look foolish and petty to boot.

"The logistics and mechanics are terrible," said Barry Switzer, Oklahoma's football coach. "I can't be standing at the pass gate checking peoples' birth certificates to make sure they really are mothers, fathers, brothers and sisters. But you have to have people from the business office assigned to be there. I thought it was going to create prob-lems, and it has."

the same time, reports of similar violations popped up at Texas, which dismissed the matter as trivial, and Tennessee, which held 10 players out of its opener.

There was no indication of mon-cy changing hands, it noted, which is the central issue. Amending the earlier decision, the subcomm nittee said the rule would no longer be considered a matter of eligibility. For each one-game violation provided money is not involved a player will lose one season pass, said the subcommittee.

On Thursday, the NCAA announced that the 10 Tennessee players held out last week had had their eligibility restored without condition, and that eligibility of another 34 players involved had been restored with the same penalty as in the Nebraska case. Did the NCAA back away? Wilford S. Bailey of Anburn, the NCAA secretary-treasurer, answers no.

"We believe some student-athletes will consider it a more severe penalty," he said. "To lose your pass privileges for an entire year just for one single-game violation may be considered more severe than a one-game suspension."

POSTCARD Endangered Barcelona

By Joseph Fitchett Description of the second seco tery. It is the santnary of Catalans, the industrious people dwelling around Barcelona in northeast Spain. Its monks safeguard the Catalan language in their Mass; its walls sheltered patriots against Franco's repression. The site seems suspended amid the colossal stone jaws of Montserrat's peaks, a set-ting that inspired Richard Wag-oer's scenic ideas for "Parsifal" To mark the Catalan national day, the crowds last Sunday families, women in black, backpacking teen-agers — filed in si-lence up a monumental marble staircase to pass reverently in front of the Catalans' most sacred em-hlem, the Black Madonna , in a room-size reliquary in ivory and gold. The nave resounded with priests and choir boys chanting in Catalan.

In the courtyard, young people fraped in red-and-yellow striped Catalonian flags did brisk business in flame-shaped badges inscribed in Catalan words to the effect of, 'the mountain's not for burning."

The motto came too late for most of Montserrat. A series of fires over two weeks last month consumed 80 perceot of the 8,000-hectare (19,700-acre) park of gardens and pines surrounding the monastery. The Montserrat blaze catalyzed a worried local mood. "Many people think the fire was against Cata-lans," explained our guide. Underving their suspicions, he said, is a feeling that Barcelona is losing its special role as Spain's vibrant European connection.

Barcelona, Spain's first middle-class society and the closest city to the border with France, nourished the talents of the young Picasso and of Catalan artists such as Joan Miró and Pablo Casals. The architect Antonio Gaudi, whose undulating structures echo the weirdly expressive shapes of Montserrat, is admired by modern artists for puting his imprint on Barcelona to a degree unequaled by a single archiloct in any other city.

But Barcelona has seen its industrial base and cultural vitality overshadowed by Madrid since Fran- the crypt. He wanted his body to be co's death in 1975 and the just like another stone in the work."

emergence of democracy in Spain. "During the decades it was in opposition, Barcelona attracted hish talent and foreign business Spanish talent and loregue outside that hesitated to be too associated with the Franco regime. But that need for a refuge has disappeared," explained a foreign consultant. Today, the miles of turn-of-thecentury architecture that once housed Barcelouans comfortably are still intact - but lackinster and too expensive to renovate. Barcelo-na's work force has priced itself out of many labor markets, businessmen say, and once-flourishing textile firms have migrated to the Madrid area. Unemployment stands at 20 percent. Barcelona has campaigned strencould help modernize the city's facilities. Barcelona is favored to be chosen pext month. But, a longtime resident noted, it will be a second chance for a decaying region, not the consecration of a rising city.

Pascal Maragall, 2 deputy may-or, maintains that Barcelona has already started to modernize. Barcelona's waterfront is being reopened to the Mediterrean, this time for recreation. Architecturally daring "mineral squares" - abstract monumental stonework that few cities are bold enough to authorize - enlivens many intersections. Spain's first high-technology park will probably be in Barcelona, to

"A city like this, with its people and traditional unity, is something typical of Europe, of its unique-ness," Mr. Maragall anid, adding: "We have to find our seeds of recovery in the city's revival."

Mr. Maragall's faith is shared by our Montserrat guide, who recalls Gaudf's dedication to his master-work, the temple of the Sagrada Familia, or Holy Family, whose stalagmitic spires are a Barcelona symbol. The open edifice, with its bright ceramics, strikes many visitors first as a giant Disneyland, then as an awarene vision, resem-bling an elusively troubling dream. Still unfinished, it monopolized Gaudi during the last decades of his career. Our guide said:

Whether he has been string by criticism in books and the press, or is simply entering a new phase, McCariney seems much more the tock 'n' toller again, after some years of churning out relatively innocuous pop. In addition to the new "Press to Play," which is his most creative and committedsounding album in years, there have been live performances.

McCariney performed at the Prince's Trust charity concert in London recently, not as the pop balladeer who wrote the Beatles' "Yesterday," but as the rocker who sang the Beatles' versions of Little Richard songs.

Recalling that appearance, he said: "They had a monster band, with people like Eric Clapton,

"The concert made me realize that I can do Beatles songs again. The Beatles' breakup was kind of like a divorce; there was always the feeling afterwards that none of us wanted to touch those songs. But time heals all, and besides, they're good songs. -

He said he hoped any band he put together would not be com-pared with the Beatles, or with his pared with the Beatles, or with his post-Beatles band, Winga. "I sup-pose I shouldn't wonry," said McCartney, whose familiar mop-top is shot through with gray these days. "We used to joke about kids in a record store find-ing a Beatles album and saying. Lorin Maszel has been appoint-ed music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, effective Sept. 1. The four-year agreement between Maa-zel and the orchestra, where he is already the principal guest conduc-tor and music adviser, calls for 8 to 12 weeks of subscription concerts each season and at least two weeks of leading domestic and foreign tours, Since André Previn left the Pittsburgh orchestra in 1984, the orchestra has functioned without a music director.
